

PROGRAM NIGHT

Monday, April 21, 2008 at 7:30

Susannah
Johnson

An English Captive among the Abenaki and French

In a dawn raid on August 30, 1754, The Johnson family was captured by a group of Abenaki. Susannah Johnson was nine months pregnant at the time. The incident began an extraordinary journey that forced Susannah to navigate the cultural waters of three societies: English, Abenaki, and French.

Our speaker will be Marcia Schmidt Blaine, Associate Professor of History at Plymouth State University. Her MA and PhD degrees were earned at UNH. Her current research looks at 18th century women and their use of personal authority and access to government power.

The presentation will be at the Old Town Hall in Campton, which is handicap accessible, and is on route 175 south. The program is free and open to the public. Refreshments will be served. For information about the Society, check our web site at www.camptonhistorical.org

This program is made possible by a grant from the New Hampshire Humanities Council.

SEE THE NOTICE ON BACK ABOUT ANTIQUE APPRAISAL DAY