“Colonial Music”

Presented by: Bob Swift

If we were living in northern New England 150 years ago, what music might we have sung? Or played? Or just plain heard? How about 250 years ago, in the mid 1700s? Or even earlier! Did you know that the first book printed in the colonies was used for singing? The April meeting of the Historical Society will be a presentation by Dr. Robert Swift and is drawn from his lecture on early American music given in the Exploring Music class at Plymouth State University. Recordings and live performance (with assistance by Margot W. Swift at the piano) will be included. Bring your vocal cords!

The presentation will be at the Old Town Hall in Campton, which is handicap accessible, and open to the public. Refreshments will be served. For information about the Society, check our web site at www.camptonhistorical.org
